CEASD Newswatch Article: Mobile, AL...A 10-year longitudinal study of the academic performance of 115 students with limited proficiency in English who were initially taught in their native language (Spanish), compared with the academic progress of 492 native English-speaking students, revealed that bilingual youngsters caught up with their classmates by fifth grade. Although they started out lagging behind age-level norms, at the fifth grade they suddenly "took off" scholastically, overtook, and in some cases outpaced their non-bilingual peers (READING IMPROVEMENT, Vol. 27, No. 2, Page 129).

CEASD Newswatch, Vol. II, No. 1
